Dr. John Raven

> Toward a Sustainable Society: Next Steps <
> K trvale udržitelné společnosti: další kroky <

Lecture with following discussion (in english)

Abstract of the lecture:

If we are to survive as a species, it will be necessary to make radical changes in every nook and cranny of our society. There can therefore be no blueprint of what a sustainable society should look like. It follows that we need a new answer to Smith and Hayek's question of how to design a society which will innovate and learn without „wise men“ or „leaders“. In his lecture, Dr. Raven will outline some surprising components of an answer that have emerged from 50 years of policy research and indicates some of the further research needed to move forward.
